University of Konstanz

Keynote lecture: A703

Open to the public

What explains universities through history either reforming or failing to reform? And why does change – even apparently radical change – so often take the form of reversion to older types? Why does reform rarely amount to the dissolution or replacement of the university?

The keynote lecture addresses these questions as part of the international and interdisciplinary workshop “The History and Legacy of Reform: Changing Promises and Realities of Higher Education” organized by the ERUA research group. The workshop takes place on campus May 5-7.
